What's Happening with Housing Prices?

According to the National Association of Realtors®, housing prices are expected to continue to rise for at least the next 12 months, especially in California.

REALTORS® also reported continued weakness and a continuing slow-down in buyer traffic in many markets. Low housing supply relative to demand, tighter standards by lenders and sluggish growth in both income and savings are constraining sales.

While this is a general trend, I believe it applies much less to high-demand neighborhoods such as College Acres, where homes listed under $1 million tend to sell very quickly.

No State Income Tax for Loan Modifications

Gov. Brown has signed into law AB 1393, which extends tax relief on forgiveness of mortgage debt by conforming California law to federal law for 2013 tax year. Now homeowners will not be charged state income tax when they've had a mortgage loan modified to reduce the principal.

New FICO Scoring System May Help Borrowers Get Home Loans

Fair Isaac Corporation, aka "FICO", the leading personal credit score provider, is implementing a new credit analysis scoring model that will give less weight to unpaid medical bills. The new FICO system will improve the credit record of many borrowers, and will also enhance the risk-assessment capability of lenders.

The new model is called FICO Score 9 and theoretically is supposed to make obtaining loans easier for consumers who have settled bad debt or have medical payments that are past due.

Fair Isaac developed the new FICO system after some of its biggest customers, including major lending institutions and regulators, weighed in that overdue medical debt was unduly depressing consumers' credit scores. Under FICO 9, some consumers' scores may rise as much as 25 points, making it easier for them to qualify for mortgages with lower interest rates.

In addition, a recent study by the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau using 5 million credit records, showed that consumers may have been overly penalized for medical debt compared with other types of debt.

Home Selling Tip for August:

Curbside Appeal - despite the Heat

If you're selling your home, remember that curbside appeal is the first impression buyers have. Keep your landscaping properly watered and maintained or substitute drought-resistant plants such as succulents in place of flowers.
